The love which God has for man has made Him prodigal, if we may so express it, in giving Himself. Is it not to be prodigal, to give not only all He has, but still more – all He is? – Abbe Gueric

To the mind of Saint Augustine, it seems that the sun, the moon, stars, mountains, rivers, all, in fine, that he saw about him, spoke to him in these words: “Augustine, love God, because He has created all this for thee, that thou mightst love Him.” But if we should love the Son of God for all He has given us, what should we not return Him for having giving us Himself? Says St. Bernard. He has given Himself to us entirely; all that He is is ours.

“God has made to men two admirable presents: He has given them His Word and His love, which is all that He has, all His treasure. The possession of the Son of God and of the Holy Coast is our Sovereign Good. Let us renounce as useless all other treasures to possess these; we will then have within ourselves the plenitude, the kingdom of God.” These reflections are those of Father Surin.

Prayer

O excess of folly! To have renounced by sin my Sovereign Good. I beg pardon, O my God, for all my sins. I would wish to make satisfaction for all sins committed. Father Eternal, Who art my Father, I beg only Thy divine Son and the Holy Ghost. They suffice for Thee, can they not also be sufficient for my heart?

I became the most humble, the most abject of all, that thou mightst learn to overcome thy pride by My humility.

With fear and trembling work out thy salvation.

To obtain salvation we must tremble at the thought of being lost, and tremble not so much at the thought of hell, as of sin, which alone can send us thither. He who dreads sin avoids dangerous locations, frequently recommends himself to God, and has recourse to the means of keeping himself in the state of grace. He you acts thus will be saved; but for him who lives not in this manner it is morally impossible to be saved. Let us attend to that saying of St. Bernard: “We cannot be too secure where Eternity is at stake.”

Thy Blood, O Jesus, my Redeemer, is my security. I should have been already lost an account of my sins, hadst Thou not offered me Thy pardon, on condition of my repentance for having offended Thee. I am sorry therefore, with my whole heart, for having offended Thee, Who art infinite Goodness. I love Thee, O sovereign Good, about every other good. I know that Thou willest my salvation and I will endeavor to secure it by loving Thee forever. O Mary, Mother of God, pray to Jesus for me.
